Welcoming Address from the Minister of Human Resources

Greetings and a warm welcome to all,

Many thanks to our Prime Minister, the Right Honourable Dato' Sri Ismail Sabri bin Yaakob, for honouring the International Public Employment Forum 2021 and extending his tremendous support on initiatives undertaken by the Ministry of Human Resources. I would also like to thank the Social Security Organisation and all IPEF speakers for the hard work that went into organising and preparing for this forum.

As you may know, the Ministry of Human Resources, through SOCSO, administers and enforces the 1969 Employees' Social Security Act, the 2017 Self-Employment Social Security Act, and the 2017 Employment

Employment Insurance System Act. I am proud that SOCSO, other than providing social protections to 473,845 active employers and 7.11 million active employees, has also assisted with rehabilitating over 50,000 Persons With Disabilities and placing them in suitable employment.

During the Covid-19 pandemic, SOCSO has consistently fulfilled its responsibilities as a social security provider, initiating programs such as the Wage Subsidy Program, the PenjanaKerjaya Hiring Incentive and Training Program, and EIS Prihatin. The IPEF, which consists of the Return to Work DIGIMOS Symposium, the International Public Employment Services Symposium, and the 2021 MYFutureJobs Career Expo, is the latest of SOCSO's efforts to support the most vulnerable groups in society, enhance the employability of the workforce, and improve the resilience of the Malaysian labour market.

I am confident that the insights shared during IPEF will be greatly beneficial to all Malaysians, from policy-makers to ordinary jobseekers, seeking to rebuild their lives and livelihoods post-pandemic. I sincerely assure all IPEF participants that you will not leave disappointed.

Thank you all, and may this event be a huge success.

YB Datuk Seri M. Saravanan

Minister of Human Resources
Malaysia

Message from the CEO of Social Security Organisation

On behalf of the organising committee, it is our pleasure to welcome you to the International Public Employment Forum (IPEF) 2021 which will be held virtually from 6th to 9th September 2021. Social Security Organisation of Malaysia (SOCSO) is proud to be organizing this inaugural forum since being a member of the World Association of Public Employment Services (WAPES).

The COVID-19 pandemic has sparked numerous crises in countries worldwide, including Malaysia. With the risks of increasing disparities in communities and developing poverty, governments and global communities must work together to meet these challenges.

Adverse effects such as prolonged unemployment, have clearly demonstrated the need for a strong and inclusive employment social security protections, which are timely essential to cushion the impact on individuals and businesses from the formal or informal sectors.

Social security, however, should not be confined to providing income replacement during crises, rather an outreach approach towards developing employment and quality jobs, in addition to establishing a labour market that is inclusive, effective, adaptive to changes and less susceptible to shocks.

For this reason, as a Public Employment Services, SOCSO is committed to developing and implementing measures as well as initiatives to promote employment, and facilitate the economic growth post Covid-19 through stabilizing the labour market. Centred on the theme of Reviving, Realigning & Rebuilding The Labour Market", the International Public Employment Forum (IPEF) 2021 will be held through three (3) concurrent events, and is among other SOCSO's initiatives to lead the recovery through the exchange of new information, practices and experience by labour market experts and key drivers.

It is our hope that this event shall empower employers, entrepreneurs, workers, and jobseekers who may be struggling during the pandemic to make use of available resources to survive, thrive, and come back stronger than ever.

We look forward to your active participation in this event and future commitments to the initiatives by SOCSO. This event, among others, assures our commitment at SOCSO to carry out the respective mandates in serving an outstanding social security protection, and national employment services for the people.

I wish you a successful and enlightening forum.

Thank you.

YBhg. Dato' Sri Dr. Mohammed Azman bin Dato' Aziz Mohammed
Chief Executive Officer
Social Security Organisation of Malaysia (SOCSO)

About the Forum

The International Public Employment Forum (IPEF) 2021, to be held virtually on the 6-9 September 2021, features high profile speakers from influential experts, corporates, social influencers, and inspiring icons to share insights on rebuilding the Malaysian economy post-Covid-19.

The Covid-19 has severely impacted lives and livelihood worldwide. However, after more than a year of tackling the pandemic, governments and businesses are finding strategies to rebuild resilience and embracing emerging opportunities as we move towards recovery.

Now, more than ever, there is a critical need for policymakers, industry leaders, entrepreneurs, social leaders to come and work together to initiate new sustainable solutions in strengthening the labour market and the economy. The forum will cover topics from diverse fields by more than 50 prominent local and international speakers to inspire governments, individuals, and businesses' strategic and active recovery.

Spread over the span of three days through virtual platforms, the IPEF 2021 includes 3 concurrent events; SOCSO's DIGIMOS Return To Work Symposium (6th - 7th September 2021), International Public Employment Services Symposium (7th - 8th September 2021); and Career Expo (7th - 9th September 2021)

Project Paper Presenters

Mr. Mohd Iqbal Haqim Bin Mohd Nor, Universiti Sains Malaysia (USM)

Project Paper 1: Case Management of Persons with Disabilities (PWDs) Mental Category: Challenges within Family Settings

In Malaysia, the case management of the Persons with Disabilities (PWDs) mental category has not been widely studied. As mental illness rapidly growing into a public health issue, more significant studies are needed in this sector. Thus, this paper aimed to explore the challenges in case management for persons with disabilities (PWDs) mental category especially issues and challenges revolving around family support and involvement for the PWDs. This qualitative study conducted in-depth interviews with 10 caseworkers from the Medical Social Work Department and the Social Welfare Department of Malaysia. The process of data analysis included content and thematic analysis. The paper highlights the challenges that caseworkers received from families such as the lack of support and collaboration during the process of care and case management of the PWDs, negative perceptions and connotation that existed towards PWDs, lack of specialized trainings and exposure received by families which restraint them to care for the PWDs. The findings suggest that more efforts have to be done by relevant stakeholders to enhance and instilled collaboration and support towards families in fulfilling the needs of PWDs. On top of that, the study highlights the importance of the role of caseworkers in brokering between the need of the families and as the need of the PWDs as well. Furthermore, effective collaboration between various government and non-governmental agencies by providing more psychological and structural support for families and PWDs are vital to ensure the prosperity of their social functioning and wellbeing.

Mr. Noor Hafifi Noor Hisham, SOCSO Rehabilitation Center

Project Paper 2: Effects of Paraplegia Fitness Integrated Training (PARAFiT) Program for Physical Activity, Exercise Self-Efficacy, Physical Fitness, and Exercise Adherence among Individuals with Spinal Cord Injury: A Nonrandomized Controlled Trial

The level of physical activity among spinal cord injury (SCI) individual is low which leads to complications due to low physical fitness and exercise self-efficacy. However, to date, there is no specific program to enhance the physical activity, fitness and education level. This is a nonrandomized single-blind study which has 44 participants which were assigned to the experimental (PARAFiT) or control (conventional physiotherapy) groups. During the supervised period (8 weeks), the PARAFiT group receive the circuit-based interval training, progressive upper limb resistance training, and health education. During the unsupervised period (8 weeks), the intervention group continuously received a health education program once a month for 2 months. The control group received a conventional physiotherapy program during the supervised period (8 weeks) and received no intervention during the unsupervised period. There were no significant differences between the intervention and control groups on physical activity level ($p = 0.356$). However, there were significant differences on the ESE level ($p = 0.001$), cardiorespiratory fitness ($p = 0.024$), and shoulder muscles, ($p = 0.001$). Exercise adherence was higher during the supervised period in the intervention (80%) and control (75%) groups, whereas adherence was low during the unsupervised period in the intervention (40%) and control (20%) groups. As conclusion, The PARAFiT program may not be superior to conventional physiotherapy but able to slow down the declining of physical activity levels after SCI. The PARAFiT also able to enhance the exercise self-efficacy and physical fitness level compared with conventional physiotherapy alone.

Project Paper 3: Hand Characteristics and Functional Abilities as Predictors of Return to Work among Adult Workers with Traumatic Hand Injury

Hand injuries affects a worker's functioning, consequently impeding their abilities to return to work. There was a limited understanding of the overall predictors when including hand characteristics and functional abilities simultaneously. Thus, it is essential to identify the most relevant predictors in returning to work among individuals with a traumatic hand injury. The objectives of this study were: (i) to compare hand function characteristics and functional abilities of injured workers who have and have not returned to work; (ii) to estimate hand function characteristics and functional abilities as predictors to return to work. A cross-sectional study was conducted with 115 adult workers with a traumatic hand injury aged between 18-59 years old from five general hospitals in Malaysia using Jamar Grasp and Pinch Gauge Dynamometer, Purdue Pegboard Dexterity Test, Numerical Rating Scale, Canadian Occupational Performance Measure (COPM), and Disability of Arm, Shoulder and Hand (DASH). Predictors were estimated using binomial logistic regression. Findings showed significant differences between occupational sector ($P=.012$), injury duration ($P=.024$), occupational performance ($P=.009$) and satisfaction with performance ($P<.001$), grip and pinch strength of injured hand ($P=.002-.045$) and DASH disability/symptom score ($P=.001$) with the worker's return to work status. Higher COPM satisfaction, lower DASH disability/symptom score and longer duration of injury were identified as significant predictors of return to work ($P=.015-.047$). In conclusion, this study suggests that occupational therapists in work rehabilitation focus on injured workers' functional performance and satisfaction following recovery from a traumatic hand injury to enhance their rate of return to work.

Ms. Fatimah Zahra Binti Abdul Malek, SOCSO

Project Paper 4: Challenges Of Adherence To The Return-to-work Plan During Pandemic Covid-19: An Explanatory Study

The focus of this study is to explore the potential factors impacting the return to work emerged from the lack of adherence to the return-to-work plan among SOCSO's Return to Work (RTW) Program's participants. The objectives of this study are to identify the positive factors that supporting the returning worker to follow the RTW plans, as well as to identify the negative factors that restrict them from following the RTW plans during pandemic Covid-19. A qualitative approach was used to conduct this study. Participants are among the employees who participating in the RTW Program in Penang. Interview methods were used to obtain primary data for this study and were recorded using a digital voice recorder. The semi-structured interview method and indepth interviews were based on question items that are modified based on previous research forms and known information. An interview template was created based on the adaptation of questionnaires. In summary, a finding that RTW plans were frequently not being adhered to might result in a decision to provide more training to supervisors about RTW and to develop a communications program so that every personnel involved understood the rationale for RTW and their role in supporting the returning worker.

Mr. Mohd Iqbal Haqim Bin Mohd Nor, Universiti Sains Malaysia (USM)

Project Paper 5: Case Management of Persons with Disabilities (PWDs) Mental Category: Challenges of Collaboration and Integration

The case management of the Persons with Disabilities (PWDs) mental category has been scarcely explored empirically in Malaysia. In relation to that, this paper aimed to explore the challenges of collaboration and integration in case management for Persons with Disabilities (PWDs) mental category. In this qualitative study, in-depth interviews with 10 caseworkers from the Medical Social Work Department and the Social Welfare Department of Malaysia was conducted. Data were analysed using content and thematic analysis. The paper highlights the collaboration and integration challenges that caseworkers faced from various stakeholders including families, respective authorities, other governmental and non-governmental agencies. Caseworkers faced multiple issues and challenges from other disciplines such as law enforcement and medical professionals. Even though the study discovered that collaboration existed between the agencies in providing the services for PWDs, a comprehensive collaboration consisting of multidisciplinary agencies was not present. Only unofficial collaboration initiated by the grassroots workers can be found. The lack of specific guidelines and framework on interdisciplinary case management has also discouraged effective collaboration in achieving the right support and needs during the process of care and case management of the PWDs. These findings suggest massive efforts have to be taken by responsible authorities to developed and enhanced existing collaboration in order to improve the competencies of case management services for the PWDs mental category. On top of that, the study highlights the importance of multi-level collaboration that needs to exist in every layer of services from the policymakers into the grassroots level.

Project Paper 6: The Application of Cyberdyne Robotic Hybrid Assistive Limb (HAL) to Support Early Return To Work (RTW) In Individual with Spinal Cord Injury (SCI): A Case Study

This is a case study with the objective to explore the application of Hybrid Assistive Limb (HAL) to support early RTW by determine the gait performances and number of days taken to RTW since admitted in a rehabilitation program. An individual with SCI (male, 26 years old, non-traumatic incomplete SCI) was applied with HAL lower limb type for 2 times a week for 8 weeks (total of 16 sessions) for 1 hour each session. As a results, The SCI individual showed improvement on the ability to walk independently without any walking aids based on Walking Index for SCI (WISCI II) scale. At baseline, the SCI individual was ambulates with walker, braces, no physical assistance for 10 meter (WISCI II level 9), after 8 weeks, the SCI individual shows the ability to walk with no devices, no braces and no physical assistance for 10 meters (WISCI II level 20). The days taken to RTW since admission in rehabilitation was 95 days (13 weeks). As conclusion, the application of HAL may increase the gait level and provide feasibility to support early RTW among an individual with incomplete SCI.

Ms. Camelia Loh

Founder, Kabel

Topic: Digital is Stronger than Brick & Mortar

Camelia Loh has been in the executive search business for 16 years before she started an HR tech startup. Going through a digital transformation is not an easy task for someone non-tech-savvy like her. Even with a great vision and appetite to keep up, she faced challenges to build something without the technical know-how, and she struggled to find good talents to build the product. In this session, Camelia will share about her business' digital transformation journey, as well as the pitfalls and lessons she learned along the way. Coupled with her experience in connecting companies and talents, she will talk about how to enable digitalisation by hiring the right people.

SOCSCO RETURN TO WORK PROGRAM (RTW)

The SOCSCO Return To Work program practices the concept of holistic disability management through a biopsychosocial rehabilitation approach to SOCSCO insured persons who suffer temporary or permanent physical or cognitive impairment due to injury or illness in order to achieve optimal levels of independence to RETURN TO WORK.

RTW case management is a collaborative process as follows:

- ▶ Psychological, emotional and mental support
- ▶ Intensive rehabilitation (e.g., cognitive, physical & vocational)
- ▶ Employee-Family Assistance Program
- ▶ Evaluation of work-related abilities (e.g. Functional Capacity Evaluation & work site assessment)
- ▶ Work accommodation & modification
- ▶ Vocational training (reskilling & upskilling)
- ▶ Assistive devices & technologies
- ▶ Job placement

CERTIFICATION EXAMINATION

FOR CERTIFIED DISABILITY MANAGEMENT PROFESSIONALS (CDMP) IN MALAYSIA

INTRODUCTION

In developed countries, Certified Disability Management Professionals (CDMP) have played an important role in facilitating disability management programs. Workplace-based disability management focuses on returning previously injured or ill employees to meaningful and productive employment. By doing so, it can improve the quality of life of employees, save on social costs and reduce the financial costs of lost productivity and insurance to employers.

Disability management professionals and practitioners in Malaysia & the Asian Region now have the opportunity to take the licensing exam and be certified at minimal cost. The Social Security Organization is the sole licensee in Malaysia authorized to organize certification examinations for Certified Disability Management Professionals (CDMP) in the Southeast Asian Region. These internationally recognized tests are also offered in Canada, the UK, Germany, Australia and others.

ELIGIBILITY

To be eligible to write the certification examination, applicants must have education in health-related field and documented work experience in disability management. The required duration for disability management related work experience depends on the extent and nature of the applicant's formal education.
